A new school for Bermondsey and Rotherhithe

Simon Hughes MP and the Southwark Liberal Democrats are calling on Southwark Council and the Government to consider all options for a new secondary school in Bermondsey and Rotherhithe.Your local Liberal Democrats have identified the Old Scott Lidget site, on Drummond Road, as being the ideal location for a school that is badly needed for our area.

It seems that there is space on the site for a secondary school as well as Southwark College and the University Technical College for 14-17 year olds, and the Government has confirmed that funding is available.This site would serve our communities well in the future and its development would see the least disruption to local residents in the short term.

I/we call on Southwark Council and the Government to explore all options for a new school in Bermondsey and Rotherhithe, including formally considering returning a secondary school to the Old Scott Lidget site on Drummond Road.
